Medical & Assisted Living in Tuscany

The region of Tuscany has a life expectancy among the highest in Italy. This results in part in a good state of health due to climate and/or lifestyle aspects, and in part to a successful policy of preventive health care and social services which further contribute to lower mortality rates.

According to the Italian Ministry of Health, the Health Service of Tuscany is ranked first in terms of quality and effectiveness of hospital care. Furthermore, in Tuscany there is the Observatory for Security, stablished in 2000 under the Special Project "A Safer Tuscany", which aims at providing a cognitive framework of the security conditions in Tuscany in order to improve them.

One third of Tuscany's inhabitants live in its 10 main cities. National statistical data show that there is a prevalence of the older population (65-74 age group and beyond) compared to the national average value. Incidence of people over 75 years old is 13.5%, compared to 11.7% of Italy*.

In Tuscany the authorised nursing homes are 324 (as of 31/12/2019), having each one an average of 40.70 beds.
The demand of the population is not fully satisfied since the latest surveys (2019) show a waiting list of over 1500 people.

The property is close to the historic centre of Fiesole with panoramic views of Florence and its countryside. It was developed for utilitarian reasons that led to a series of distinct buildings. The building on Via Vecchia Fiesolana is developed on four floors above ground, with a half pavilion roof. Behind, there's a separate building with four floors and a basement. On the left, there's a section composed by four floors above ground, where the main entrance to the hospital is located. On the left, there's the building's part created during expansion of the end of 1950's, arranged on three floors. In the back there are two distinct parts of the building. In the south-west part of the complex there is an additional part of only one floor, with some technical rooms. On the north-west there's a part of the building built more recently, leaning against the land behind, consisting of four floors, on the north-east side, there's another part built before the World War II, between the central body and the embankment.

The complex consists of the former Hospital named "Il Calambrone" located along Pisa coast. The building was largely built in the 1930's as a set of large building complexes intended to be used as public and corporate summer camps and was developed after the war, including through the establishment of health facilities. The Presidio, "Istituto Cure Marine di Tirrenia V. Putti", built in the 1960s and transformed, following acquisition of USL Pisa assets, into its current hospital use in the '70s, is located in an area near to the sea and is characterized by linear and austere architectural configuration. The structure is entirely in reinforced concrete, with three interconnected main blocks. In the second half of the 1900s, with the slow disposal of colonies, the area, which was sparsely populated, faced an overall decline, but from the start of the 2000s urban choices brought new development.
